

ABDUCTED

Jason Ng was abducted by assailants working with Immigration and Customs Enforcement on July 19, 2007. He fell ill and suffered severe pain during his confinement but was not given sufficient medical care. He was eventually diagnosed with cancer and a fractured spine and died in August 2008.

Jason was a computer programmer who was seeking political asylum after arriving in the United States in 1992. He was married to a US citizen and had two sons.

The Middlesex County government receives millions of federal tax dollars to house over 150 people detained by ICE in the county prison. In March 2008, a Middlesex detainee died due to medical neglect. There are documented reports of widespread verbal and physical abuse, denial of medical care, interference with religious practices, and inhumanly crowded and unhealthy conditions in facilities housing ICE detainees.
